"Team Based Learning" (TBL)

Speaker: Dr. Larry Michaelsen, Senior Fulbright Scholar, Professor of Management, University of Central Missouri, Warrensburg, MO

Description: A sought-after speaker in areas such as Team Based Learning (TBL), Michaelsen is the senior editor of the book, Team-Based Learning: A Transformative Use of Small Groups in College Teaching. He began developing the TBL approach to teaching in 1979 after encountering significant growth in class size as a teacher at the University of Oklahoma. As his classes began to expand, he explored ways to help positively engage students in learning without letting them get lost in the crowd. He opted for a less-traditional approach. Under TBL, instead of passively receiving information from the teacher, Michaelsen said students share the responsibility for learning by working in teams. Team-oriented activities begin the first day of the semester and last throughout the course, giving students an opportunity to learn from their peers. These activities also help them develop important life skills such as better interpersonal communication and accountability.
